GIFF: The World Without Us

The United States today enjoys unrivaled and unprecedented power and influence. With a military budget equivalent to the next 14 countries combined, one military analyst stated: If the US would go to war with the rest of the world in the same time, chances are that the US would win. "No international event happens without the scrutiny of the watchful eye of the State Department, no nation dares offending American interest or principles. Is that good or bad for the world? Opinions across the globe vary much as the personal experiences and the political culture of each country. East Europeans praise the US for defeating the "Evil Empire". Western Europeans, saved twice in the last century from Fascism and Communism resent the US under the burden of gratitude but they can't justify their governments incompetence and inaction. Many believe that the age of Militaries had passed and diplomacy can solve all the issues. Panamanians resent the hundred year occupation, but are happy for not being part of Colombia. Cubans blame their poverty on the US embargo, but risk their lives to make it to the shores of Florida. Japan under the noble excuse of pacifism, renounced any international
